GOVERNOR SEEKS TO OBTAIN INCREASE IN GASOLINE ALLOTMENT

In an attempt Wednesday to keep the State within its August gasoline quota, Governor Sumner Sewall asked for the closing of all gas stations in the State the next two Sundays. The Governor and State Fuel Director Frank E. Southard are in Washington today in an effort to have Maine's allotment increased.

It is hoped to increase the quota enough so that stations may remain open for business on Sundays. Both the Governor and Director Southard expressed concern over the situation because of the thousands of tourists in the State, expressing the belief that Maine motorists should sacrifice a bit for the tourists whose business meant so much to Maine.

The Governor's statement read: "If the present rate of consumption is maintained, there will be no gasoline available for sale to the public during the last three days of August. When Maine's quota is used, the oil industry is required by Federal regulation to cease distribution. A new quota will be available Sept. 1."

"There is ample supply of gasoline in the country but this local shortage is caused by the diversion of American tankers to British uses."

The Governor said Maine officials had protested against both the system and administrative methods used in the present plan of distribution. "We shall continue to protest and insist," he said, "that means be found to have the people of Maine treated fairly and equitably compared to all other sections of the country."

CHESTER H. BEAN

Word was received Monday of the death of Chester H. Bean, which occurred Sunday in Montgomery, Ala. Mr. Bean was born in Bethel 56 years ago, the son of Hiram H. and Rosilla H. Bean.

He prepared for college at Gould Academy, and later attended the University of Maine. From the latter institution he was graduated in 1907 with a degree in engineering.

He has always worked in the engineering field. He enlisted in the World War as an engineer, and returned from France Captain of his company. In recent years he has been in the service of the federal government.

Mr. Bean married Mildred Coon of Detroit. He is survived by her and by two children Barbara Avery and Trafton Howe. A half brother, Edward Bean, died two years ago in Vermont.

Interment will be at Silver Creek, N. Y.

NORTONS CELEBRATE 23rd WEDDING ANNIVERSARY

Mr. and Mrs. Eugene Norton celebrated their 23rd wedding anniversary Friday with a dinner party to relatives and a few friends. Al Cohen, who has an orchestra in New York City, played a piano solo, composed for the occasion. William Geier sang two solos, accompanied by Mrs. Geier. Other musical selections were rendered by the guests. The out-of-state guests presented the honor guests a beautiful silver meat platter.

Those present included: Robert S. Norton, Guilford; Ralph Grover, Mason; Mrs. Barnett Cohen, Mr. and Mrs. William, Philadelphia; Penna; Miss Shirley Gleicher and Raymond Gleicher, New York City; Al Cohen, Philadelphia; Miss Herbertina Norton, Mr. and Mrs. Walter Grover and daughter Mildred, Bethel.

ACTION PICTURES

From this angle subject motion is rapid and a fast shutter speed should be used. By getting farther away, and having the action moving almost directly toward the camera, effective sports pictures can be taken at slower shutter speeds.

ACTION pictures are one of the most thrilling phases of amateur photography. Try it once and you'll find that each good shot brings the urge for more. Moreover, in this age of popular sports, the field of subject matter is virtually endless.

To picture fast action you need a camera with a high-speed shutter and a fairly rapid lens. With modern high-speed films, however, an ultra-fast lens is not as important as it was several years ago, but a shutter with speeds ranging from 1/200 to 1/500 of a second is ideal if you take many pictures of this type.

If you have a camera with slow shutter speeds, there are certain tricks you can use to offset this disadvantage. For example, consider the picture above. The action is directly across the lens, and a shutter speed of 1/400 of a second was necessary to stop movement. If you stood in a position, however, where the horse and rider were coming more directly toward you, the action would appear less rapid, and only 1/200 of a second would be needed to arrest the motion.

Another stunt is to follow the action. Develop a firm grip on your camera, and move it smoothly with the direction of the motion, keeping the subject centered in the viewfinder. When the subject reaches the desired spot, release the shutter. In this manner you can take pictures of rapidly moving subjects at shutter speeds as slow as 1/50 of a second, rendering the subject sharp, with the background drawn out in a long blur, suggesting speed.

Often times you can pose an action shot that will convey all the feeling of rapid motion in the finished print. Just have your subject take a practice golf swing, a tennis stroke, or whatever you choose. When you see a pose that is particularly effective, have him stop for a second, or repeat the position, while you take the picture. Don't let a camera with a slow shutter stop you from taking action pictures. Try some of the tricks mentioned, and see how many opportunities you once passed up can be turned into excellent photographs.

MIDDLE DAM

Fred Hutchins of Andover, the clerk and postmaster at Lakewood, was responsible for saving the lives of three boys during the high winds of last Tuesday. The boys who were on a canoe trip through the Lakes, failed to put ashore when the squall struck, and were capsized off Black Cat Brook on Lower Richardson Lake. Mr. Hutchins fortunately observed their plight through field glasses and promptly went to their aid in a motor boat. The boys were exhausted when he reached but he managed to get them aboard. It was impossible to save the canoe.

Wesley Record of the State Motor Police has started work on his camp on the old Oxford Club lot on Rapid River.

Edward Miller has been spending a few days at the Frank Walker Camp in Upton.

Miss Alice Dickerson of Newton, Mass., is visiting her sister, Mrs. Ralph Rich.

Misses Annie Barnett and Bessie Casey of Upton have been spending a few days at Forest Lodge.

Dave Mulligan and Bill Barnett came in from Upton last Sunday to remove the beds and stoves from the Barnett Number Three lumber camp on Sunday Pond Cove. This proved impossible to do, as the low stage of the water prohibited getting a boat within half a mile of the camp.

The deep gates of Middle Dam have been raised for the first time in August in the past fifteen years.

Mr. and Mrs. John Prescott, guests at Lakewood, gave a party Saturday night for the camp help.

Four hundred stock trout, averaging a pound in weight, were planted below Middle Dam during the past week.

DEFENSE QUIZ

Q. Can my children buy Defense Savings Stamps?

A. Yes. Hundreds of thousands of American children are buying Stamps regularly as their share in the national savings program.

Q. Why should children be encouraged to buy Savings Stamps?

A. Because by buying Stamps they write their names on a Roll of Honor of Americans who are doing their part to show the dictators that united America will never flinch to preserve her sacred liberty.

Q. After my child has collected enough Stamps to exchange for a Bond, can the Bond be registered in the child's name?

A. Yes. A minor may own a Defense Savings Bond. Many parents are registering Bonds in their children's names to prepare for future educational needs.

Note—To buy Defense Bonds and Stamps, go to the nearest post office, bank, or savings and loan association; or write to the Treasurer of the United States, Washington, D. C., for a mail order form.

Nothing is ever going to be free in this country. Somebody will have to pay. To the extent to which the Government dispenses bounty of all kinds and for all purposes, the burden on those who work and save will increase. When the rich, as a class, have been reduced to bankruptcy, and when the middle class have been driven to dependence, further contribution will be forced in the form of compulsory labor. The skilled will be compelled to offer their best.
The unskilled will be driven to offer the little which they have, and the whip of the super-government will be the incentive to human effort.—Paul F. Cadman.

Lindbergh says that the United States is "ruled by hypocrisy and subterfuge." Well, perhaps, the Greeks might have had a better word for it, but you can't get away from the fact that Lindbergh is saying a good many things that cannot be easily refuted, no matter what you may think of the attitude he is taking.—Bridgton News.

Nothing is easier than fault-finding;
no talent, no self-denial, no brains, no character are required to set up in the grumbling business.

In a free country every man thinks he has a concern in all public matters, that he has a right to form and a right to deliver an opinion on them.—Burke.

rance of flowers.—H. W. Shaw.

ling: there is a good deal of all, one wants to be at rest.—

GOULD ACADEMY

Gould Academy will open Tuesday at 8:15 A. M., September 9.

This items is to clarify several matters which seem to be misunderstood concerning the school policies and daily schedule. The daily schedule will start as usual at 8:15
A. M. with three one-hour periods and an activities period of 45 minutes. The noon hour will be from 12 to 1. In the afternoon there will be two periods until 3 P. M. Immediately following this, there will be a program of intramural and in-terclass sports into which all pupils are definitely urged to enter.

The daily schedule will rotate;
each subject coming an hour later
each day and the period omitted will come the first period the following day. The activities period will remain stationary.

The policy of the school concerning pupils who drive to school will be the same as formerly. The pupils who come into Bethel to board are urged, as formerly, to confer with the headmaster and, if possible, to live in the dormitories.

There is no change concerning the registration fees; $2.00 for girls and $2.50 for boys. Please have this on the first day.

With the changing times the question of study hours is a pressing one and the Academy expects the parents and pupils to carry out a regular and systematic program of study which will not prove embarrassing to the boarding students and cause the town students to fail to get their work completed.

Our greatest problem in the past has been over the week-end when Monday's work has been greatly sighted. The boarding students will observe study hours on Saturday morning and this will put a definite responsibility upon parents and pupils to see that some definite study periods were observed by the town students on Saturdays or Sundays, or they will fall behind.

Gould Academy will inaugurate another advance in her rapidly developing school program this fall with the opening of her new enclosed field and athletic plant.

Paul Hunsicker has been chosen to head the Physical Education work of this newly created Department of Health and Physical Education. Mr. Hunsicker attended the Savage School for Physical Education in New York City for one year and was gym instructor
in a New York Settlement House during that time. The next four years he attended Syracuse University where he received a Bachelor of Science degree in Physical Education with Social Science as a second major. He also held a part-time instructorship in the Syracuse Y. M. C. A. for two years. He also assisted at Syracuse for two years.
He was Secretary of the Intramural Carnival and worked in the field of Corrections, Test and Measurements.

The last two years Mr. Hunsic-ker has held a Teaching Fellowship at Springfield College under Dr. Cureton. He administered the Corrective and Body Mechanics Examinations to the Freshmen, which one can safely say are as comprehensive as any offered in America. This last winter and spring he assisted in the Corrective and Physical Development Laboratory, receiving his Master's degree
this June.

With such a background and the facilities at Gould Academy it is the plan of the school to have a program for all students—boys and girls—second to none in the country.

Department of Health Gould Academy is fortunate indeed to secure the services of Homer Lawrence, M. D., a graduate of Oberlin College in Ohio and of Harvard Medical School, to be the Academy's Physician and the medical head of our Health and Physical Program known as the Department of Health.

This Department is developed,
after extensive study of the programs in such well-known schools
as Milton Academy, Choate School, Taft School, Deerfield Academy,
Phillips-Andover, Phillips-Exeter,
Lawrenceville School, Middlesex School, Mount Hermon School, Hill
School, and the University of Minnesota.

It is the plan of Gould Academy to carry forward a program of Health education through direct instruction, development of habits and attitudes, teaching of First Aid, development of scientific attitudes toward health and disease, interpretation of health sciences and the coordination of the already existing subjects of the physical and biological sciences, social studies, industrial arts, home economics, dietetics, and physical education.

Gould offers a Health service to all its teachers and pupils, also, the checking of all the physical plant, lighting, heating, ventilation, towels, soap, toilets, drinking fountains, seating, lunch rooms and dining rooms will come under this department. A study of teachers' health is also considered as well as all other school employees and all food handlers. Milk, water and all perishable foods will be regularly checked.

The physical and medical examination of students will be a thorough one with special attention to blood, urine, and lungs with a complete postural examination, all made with the latest apparatus and techniques. All athletics will be under the doctor's control.

The doctor will travel with all teams and be present at all practices for care of accidents and injuries.

All boarding pupils will be under his immediate care and he will maintain regular office hours for consultations, and he will also serve as the excuse office for all cases of illness and absences due to illness.

Work in the field of Prevention and Control of Communicable Diseases will be stressed and special help for those needing and wishing immunizations and specific treatments will be carefully considered.

It is the aim of this program to:

1. Reduce absenteeism due to communicable disease.
2. Reduce morbidity.
3. Reduce accidents.
4. Correct defects.
5. Improve nutritional status.
6. Improve health habits, attitudes and ideals.
7. Bring better adjustments between student and school program.
8. Increase confidence and interest of parents in health supervisions and carrying out of recommendations of the school staff.
9. Increase interest and cooperation of teachers.
10. Bring better correlation of health work with other subjects and activities of the school.

Dr. Lawrence will be assisted by a registered nurse, Miss Phyllis Davis, R. N., who will be in residence throughout the school year.
Miss Davis is now at the Pratt Diagnostic Hospital in Boston taking special training in x-ray, car-diograph, and other specialized equipment in preparation for her work at Gould.

That Nagging Backache

May Warn of Disordered
Kidney Action

Modern life with its hurry and worry, irregular habits, improper eating and drinking—its lack of exposure and intervention—throws heavy strain on the work of the kidneys. They are apt to become over-taxed and fail to filter excess acid and other impurities from the life-giving blood.

You may suffer nagging backache,
headaches, dizziness, getting up nights,
leg pains, swelling—feel constantly tired, nervous, all worn out. Other signs of kidney or bladder disorder are sometimes burning, scanty or too frequent urination.

Try Doan's Pills. Doan's help the kidneys to pass off harmful excess body waste. They have had more than half a century of public approval. Are recommended by grateful users everywhere.

AMBASSADOR TO THE ALLIES

America's Ambassador to the exiled Allied governments in London, Mr. Anthony J. Drexel Biddle, Jr., of Philadelphia, is shown a Polish gun position on the Scottish coast by General Paszkiewicz, an old acquaintance. Their meeting in Scotland recalls dramatically the days when Mr. Biddle was Ambassador to Poland, whence the General's gallant veterans have fought their way across Europe, to continue until victory the fight for freedom. Mr. Biddle is now U. S. envoy to five Allied governments in Britain: the Belgian, Dutch, Norwegian, Polish and Yugoslav. All of these have fighting forces at their command, but the largest in Britain are the Polish—about 70,000 men, with an additional 10,000 in the Royal Air Force.

WEST PARIS

Miss Phyllis Welch, R. N., of New York City is visiting her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Hartson Welch.

Advertising isn't perfect

Some advertisements are better than others, just as some show windows are better than others.

Or as some salesmen are better than others.

So advertising isn't perfect, but it does a better job than anything else yet discovered.

It tells you what is to be had, and where to buy it, and is the cheapest way of doing the job.

The CITIZEN

Vanished Men

By GEORGE MARSH

Penn. Publishing Co.
W.H.U. Service

SYNOPSIS

CHAPTER I—Six men traveled the Chibougamau trail in the wilds of northern Canada. Six men died. They were reported drowned in the rapids. Murders around the camp fires expressed other things. Garry Finlay, whose brother Bob was one of the six, Red Malone and Blaise, a half-breed guide, in the pulse of survivors, arrive to investigate the deaths. Finlay had received an anonymous letter declaring that the men were murdered. There is a suspicion that Jules Isadore, big fur man, had made an important gold strike in the Waswanipi country and will stop at nothing to keep prospectors out.

CHAPTER II—The inhabitants are in terror of Isadore and his right-hand man, Tete-Blanche.

CHAPTER III—On the second day out, just as they had safely passed the worst of the rapids, the three investigators were ambushed from shore. Garry and Blaise were slightly wounded.

CHAPTER IV—From Indians Blaise learned ten days later that there is much excitement among them over a "big bird" from the south, and that there is talk that three men perished in the Nottaway.

Through a half-opened door peered a hideously grotesque face, framed by yellowish-white hair.

"Tete-Blanche!" Finlay muttered. Covered by his left arm his right hand slipped beneath his coat and closed on the stock of the 45 in the shoulder holster beneath his left armpit.

"Like!"

But the girl's obsessed eyes were still anchored to the closed door across the room.

"Like!"

She rose and went to her step mother, followed by Isadore, while Finlay waited with folded arms, fingers glued to the stock of his hidden pistol.

"Excuse me for a moment, gentlemen!" said the trader. He raised his half-conscious wife to her feet and took her from the room, followed by Lise. At the door she turned a bloodless face toward the two men at the table, then disappeared.

Red Malone's puzzled eyes clung to his chief's. As he caught the meaning of the folded arms he stiffened, right hand on hip, and pivoted swiftly in his chair. But the door Finlay was watching remained closed. On the silence of the room broke the tapped message from the middle finger of his left hand: "Tete-Blanche was at the door behind you! It scared Lise! If Isadore doesn't return, we'll shoot our way to the canoe!"

Red nodded. Action! There was the glint of sun on young ice in his blue eyes. Still in their chairs the men waited. Then the trader returned.

"It is most embarrassing, gentlemen," he coolly apologized. "Mrs. Isadore took more than she's accustomed to. I hope you'll understand."

Garry rose. "Of course!" he said. "Will you thank her and your daughter for a most delicious dinner and—interesting evening?"

"But you're not going? The night is young."

Finlay admired Isadore's callous nerve. "It's late," he replied. "We'll say good night."

"Well, if you insist. I'll give you a light to your canoe."

Outside the night was black as a spruce swamp. Isadore produced an electric torch and walked to the shore beside Finlay. Close on the heels of the trader followed Malone.

As he pushed off the canoe Finlay said: "The evening was most pleasant, Mr. Isadore, and—interesting."

"It will be a great pleasure to see you again, gentlemen," came the cool rejoinder. "And don't forget that trading when you finish your map."

Finlay and Malone paddled in silence until they were well offshore. "Now what do you think of that for a dinner party?"

"Think?" started Red. "My fingers ached to drown him in front of his place. I thought his own wife! Same like on the sick Jules Isadore! And was he sure?"

"That was clever headwork of yours, Red, when I signalled that he'd drugged the wine. That strange western custom of switching glasses had him stopped dead. Nothing like an Irish imagination!"

Red chuckled. "Thought you'd like it! Say, the girls couldn't have been wise to his plan!"

"No, it didn't look so. But what was his plan when he had us doped?"

"I believe he wanted to search us. He'd let us sleep it off,—then he'd apologize for his strong wine we couldn't handle."

"Our showing up here must have staggered him. But he's got nerve."

"What interests me most is this Tete-Blanche. He seems to be a bogey man at Nottaway and Lise looked as if she'd seen a ghost when she spotted him in the doorway. She must know he's Isadore's private killer."

"I wonder how much those gals do know."

"Get anything out of Corinne? She threw a wicked eye at you, Red. I was worried—thought she'd kiss you right before King Isadore!"

Red laughed. "What a doll to trot on your knees! She's right up my alley for looks! But she didn't ask a suspicious question. How about Lise?"

"She puzzled me. She started off with a rush—was gay and flippant; then suddenly grew absent-minded. Drank hardly anything! Didn't hear half what I said!"

"She was sure easy on the eyes in those whitepeards."

"And easier in that white dress at dinner! Skin sort of transparent. The distinct impression I got was that she wants to leave Waswanipi. She didn't say so, of course. But I sensed it. She's worried."

The approach of the canoe to the island where Blaise had a bright fire burning as a beacon was announced by the barking of airedale.

"Well, Blaise, what do you think of it?" asked Finlay, when he had finished his story.

"We leave here, wabatch, quick!"

"You mean tonight?"

Brassard nodded.

"Why tonight?"

"Two Montagnais fallar come here after dark. I give dem suppar and taste of whiskey. Den dey talk. We move out, now. Onles you wish to fight."

"Well, what's it all about, Blaise?" demanded Red.

Blaise told his story. That afternoon the two hunters had brought a canoe load of sturgeon to Isadore's place to be traded for supplies. They were in the trade-room when the Peterboro was first sighted far down the lake. Labele rushed in and called the man with the scarred face outside where Isadore was watching the distant canoe through glasses. Curious, the two Indians moved to the door and listened. The trader was wild with rage. "You liar!" he said to Batoche. "Here come de men you said drown in de Long Saute of de Nottaway." The trader struck Batoche in the face but Labele stepped between them. Then they moved away out of earshot of the eavesdroppers.

Later, the Montagnais were starting with their supplies for their fishing camp when they heard an angry voice up the shore. "What good are you? Now Isadore send me to dat island tonight to finish your job!"

They looked and saw the man with white hair, the Montagnais called Nechewed, the Killer, with a little moon, Tetu, talking to Batoche. So, after dark, the hunters had come to the island with the warning.

When Blaise had finished Finlay looked hard at Malone over at the fire. "How does that strike you?" he asked.

"So far as I'm concerned," said Red, driving a flat like stone into his cupped hand, "I'd like to get this white-haired beauty, now, set a trap for him and finish him right here. It's got to be sometime, why not tonight?"

Finlay shook his head. "Not yet, Red! You forget it's Isadore we're after. I want to talk to Waswanipi Indians first who must have met Bob and, later, seen his smashed canoe. We're leaving now for the head of the lake."

"I guess you're right, boss. We want that evidence first."

"What's your idea, Blaise?" asked Garry.

Brassard drew deeply on his pipe before he answered: "At fishin' camp at head of de lake is dat Montagnais treaty chief dey call Pierre Wabistan, de Injun on Matagami tell us about. Dose fallar here to-night say he have moch trouble at de spring trade wid Tete-Blanche. We have talk wid him."

"That's our man, Red!" cried Garry. "Did you ask these Indians about the men lost on the Waswanipi River, Blaise?"

"Ah-hah! Dey say Pierre Wabistan have story to tell about dat."

"They knew nothing, themselves?"

"No, dey say talk wid Pierre."

"You bet we will! All right, let's go! We'll leave a nice fire for Tete-Blanche to warm his hands on."

"Boss," said Red, "why not leave a surprise party in the shape of that bear trap we found in the outlet. We'll hide it with leaves near the fire and w— Tete-Blanche comes ashore to get us some of his party'll step in it."

"We'll save that trap for emergencies, Red," laughed Garry. "We might get Tete-Blanche, himself, and that would cheat you out of that mauling you're going to give him."

Red clicked his tongue regretfully as they loaded the canoe. "What wouldn't I give to be here tonight when they come!"

Through the night the rhythmical "churn-swish, churn-swish," of three maple blades drove the Peterboro up the lake. Dawn streaked the east with opal and rose but the nose of the canoe endlessly dipped and lifted as three pairs of tireless shoulders and arms swung in unison. Pearl and saffron and turquoise painted the sky above indigo hills; red-throated loons waited and dove, black duck and shell drake skittered before them as the canoe pushed its spear-headed ripple over the smoking floor of Waswanipi. They crossed the mouth of a cove and a cow moose and calf, knee deep in lily pads, watched them, ears lifted at the sound of paddles pounding on gunwales. At last, when the eastern hills were rimmed with fire the canoe headed inshore and the tired crew cooked a meal and slept. Far in the distance, like battleships at anchor, the islands off the mouth of the Waswanipi hung above the windless mirror, reflecting the green ridges of the shores.

CHAPTER VI

Camped on the islands the Montagnais who, in winter, hunted the hinterlands, lived through the short summer on their gill-nets and sturgeon spears. For the sandbars were the spawning ground of the name-wok, the great fish with the armor of bony plates and the red, beef-like flesh. And so the lake had got its name: Waswanipi, the Water Where they Spear Fish by Torchlight.

"Where did they say Pierre Wabistan is camped, Blaise?" asked Garry, on the following afternoon, as the Peterboro approached the maze of islands.

"On Isan' wid big boulder."

As the canoe passed the fishing camps where lines of ripples thrusting from points of shore marked the wood floats of gill-nets set for pike, dore and whitefish. It was hailed by men sprawled in the warm sun in front of caribou-skin tepees. Huskies yelped at the strange dog passing in the canoe and flame flung back his brittle airedale challenge. Groups of dark-faced women, colored ribbons braided into their long hair, laughed at Blaise's Cree pleasantries, for the languages are similar.

An oldish Indian with the eyes and hooked beak of an eagle waited with three young men as the canoe slid in to the stony beach of an island marked by an enormous boulder.

"Kekway!" greeted Blaise, shaking hands with the four Montagnais. "Where is Chief Wabistan?" he asked in Cree.

The old man replied in English: "You talk in de Cree. De Gortling eyes covered Blaise, Garry and Red in turn, from hair to toes."

"We come to make picture of de lake for de Faders in Ottawa," said Blaise. "We wish to make talk wid you."

Wabistan nodded, measuring Finlay in a long stare as if probing for his thoughts. Then he said: "You are brave man to come here."

"Why do you say that?" demanded Garry.

"Manee white man die on Waswanipi River!"

"The man I'm after!" thought Garry. Then he said: "Let us smoke and take council, Chief Wabistan. We need two canoe men. Will your sons go with us?"

The young Montagnais looked doubtfully at their father's impassive face. Garry glanced at Blaise but Brassard's features were as immutable as stone. He handed each of the Indians a plug of Hudson's Bay nigger-head and they squatted on their heels and filled their pipes. Finlay struck a match, lit Wabistan's pipe, then his own and, after an interval of puffing, asked: "What killed the white men you say died?"

Wabistan's narrowed eyes focused on a distant island. In his face was no trace of humor as he said: "Ver' strange bug keel dem."

Finlay caught Red's surprised look as the Indian continued. "Eet fly more quick dan duck-hawk and it sting more deep dan otjowok, de deer-fly." The old man's gaze hung to the island. The faces of his sons were glazed with awe.

"And it starts to fly with a loud noise," added Finlay, gazing straight before him.

"Yes, as the ice splits wid cold."

"You saw the white men who died last summer?" Fearing to break the spell, Finlay still avoided Wabistan's eyes.

"Two bodies I saw below de Fry-ling Pan on de Waswanipi."

"The year before that there were four who died. Did you see them?"

"No."

"Those you saw last year were young?"

"Too young to die!"

"They were shot?"

"Dey were shot—den broken by rocks w'en dey pass 'ru whitewater."

Finlay sucked in a deep breath with a pain that searched his heart.

Reading the face of his friend, Blaise addressed Wabistan in Cree on the chance that the old man might answer the bold question

An oldish Indian with the eyes and hooked beak of an eagle waited.

more frankly in his native tongue. "Why does this Tete-Blanche shoot white men from their canoe?"

Wabistan's face reflected no surprise. "Tete-Blanche tells the people white men who hunt gold shall come to this country," he replied in Montagnais. "It is the Indian's country and the Indian's gold."

"Why does he say that?"

"Because he fears that the white men will go away and tell what they see."

Blaise interpreted the startling reply.

"Ask him if it's gold on the sandbars of the river Isadore wishes to hide from the white man," suggested Garry.

"I have never seen gold," murmured the old man.

Garry met Red's incredulous eyes. "Then ask him, Blaise, what it is that Isadore hides from the white men," he prompted.

"He say," interpreted Blaise, "if we wait here until de Moon when de Bird fly affair de Moitit we see strange thing. More he will not say now."

"August," said Finlay. "We will wait." He rose and gripped Wabistan's bony hand. "You hate Isadore and Tete-Blanche?"

The eyes of the Indian glittered with a look as feral as a wolverine's. His face worked with his wrath. "Tete-Blanche and Wabistan are like wolf and carcajou! Some day de wolf will feel de carcajou's claw!"

"Good!" thought Garry. "We need him. But what can it be Isadore doesn't want seen by white men?"

That night the water around the islands seemed alive with giant glowworms as the torches of the Montagnais flared and faded while their canoes patrolled the bars where the sturgeon lay. To add to the food supply the Peterboro joined the birch-barks.

Five of the great fish lay in the canoe when their last torch sputtered and died. Finlay was easing the boat toward camp while Red and Blaise smoked when, from the shadows, the wraith of a canoe moved across their bows and a torch held by a short, crouching figure, burst into flame. In the stern paddled a man with white hair. The canoe moved on and, as a sponge wipes a slate, the murk blotting out the white-haired paddler.

"He's on our trail!" whispered Malone.

"Yes," answered Garry, "Tete-Blanche and his wolves are on our trail."

"Why not go after him and settle it?"

"No! We've got other work to do first."

—To Be Continued Next Week—

THIS WEEK IN DEFENSE

President Roosevelt and Britain's Prime Minister Churchill held a series of secret conferences at sea and jointly issued a declaration of national policies calling for:

No territorial "aggrandizement," no territorial changes not in accord with the will of the people concerned, right of all peoples to choose their form of government, equal access to the raw materials of the world needed for prosperity, international cooperation for improved living standards, safety to all nations within their own borders from fear and want, freedom of the seas, disarmament and other measures to lighten "the crushing burden" of armaments.

Assistant Secretary of State Berle, speaking in Washington, said "it is the plan of this Government, when the tides of barbarity shall be rolled back, to turn the full measure of its economic strength to bringing help, relief and sustenance to the...many countries... now cold (and) hungry."

Production
OPM Director Knudsen, speaking in New York, said that by next July defense production would be at its peak and "after that America can write its own ticket on war material and it can be twice anybody else's ticket." To do this, however, small communities and manufacturers must be willing to band together to seek defense work, he said.

William Batt, deputy production director, speaking in New York, said the Government and large corporations are more anxious to give work to small contractors now than a few months ago because of the great pressure of work today.

Agriculture

Agriculture Secretary Wickard announced that there is no prospect of food rationing "in the foreseeable future" although the nation may have to depend more on some foods than others. He said there are 17 percent more cattle on feed for market in the 11 corn belt states than a year ago and the corn crop will exceed last year's by nearly 150,000,000 bushels.

In a letter to Mr. Wickard, the President said "increases in the production of vital foods and feeds is reassuring (because) food is a weapon against Hitlerism just as much as munitions..."

The CCC agreed to furlough enrollees so they might help harvest where labor shortages exist. The work would be voluntary and the enrollees would receive the prevailing wage. Congress passed a measure forbidding the Government to dispose of any cotton or wheat now in its bins except for domestic and foreign relief, export or lease-lend aid. The bill also permits farmers to use excess wheat for feed without penalty and extends 85 percent parity loans to peanut growers.

Air

The OPM announced 1,400 military planes were produced in July. War Under Secretary Patterson, dedicating a new plane factory, said the monthly output of combat planes increased 114 percent in the last nine months and production of other military planes increased 105 percent. Speaking at the same ceremonies, Chief of Army Air Corps Brett said that American planes abroad have had great success.

Army

Congress approved an 18-month extension of service for selectees, reserve officers and National Guardsmen and voted to increase by $10 the monthly basic pay of all except officers after the first year of service.

The Senate committee investigating the defense program issued a report stating that costs of the Army's $1,000,000,000 camp construction program were "unduly and unnecessarily high" because of lack of planning. War Under Secretary replied that despite cold weather, labor and material shortages and other almost insurmountable difficulties the camps were ready before the time set for troop arrival and the American Army "is now the best housed Army in the world."

Economic Defense

The Economic Defense Board, composed of Vice-President Wallace and ranking cabinet officers, met for the first time and outlined two undisclosed projects to coordinate and strengthen the nation's economic defense. The National Resources Planning Board issued a booklet, "After Defense—What?" calling upon public and private agencies to start immediate planning to prevent chaos after the emergency. The Board stated that if adequate post-defense plans were not ready and another depression allowed to set in, the nation could lose everything it is now striving to defend.

Labor

A WPA survey showed unemployment declined 300,000 in July to 5,600,000—nearly 4,000,000 less than last July. The Bureau of Employment Security reported job placements of persons under 21 years increased 78 percent in the past year. The Bureau also reported placements of Negroes are 47 percent higher than six months ago. The Committee on Fair Employment Practice announced Army, Navy and Maritime Commission contracts now contain clauses prohibiting hiring discrimination because of race, creed, color or national origin.

The War Department announced defense strikes increased from 24 involving 14,000 workers last week, to 28 strikes involving 21,700 men as of August 15. The U. S. Conciliation Service settled 26 disputes. Acting Navy Secretary Bard said the strike at the Federal Shipbuilding Company, Kearny, N. J., caused a daily loss of more than 200,000 man-hours of work on vitally needed combat ships.

The President suspended the eight-hour day for mechanics and laborers of the War Department working on airfields, troop housing and similar projects in order to rush completion.

Prices and Priorities

The OPACS set ceiling prices three and one-half cents a pound on raw sugar, duty paid at New York, three-tenths of a cent under August 11 prices, and advised consumers not to pay more than present retail prices under any circumstances. Ceiling prices on rayon will be set shortly, the agency said.

OPM placed steel under full priority control, asked all pig-iron producers to set aside two percent of September output, and prohibited further manufacture of white wall auto tires to conserve rubber and zinc.

Inflation Control

The President gave the Governors of the Federal Reserve System control over installment buying to prevent a volume of easy credit to consumers so large it would cause inflation by increasing the demand for goods at a time the supply is growing less. The Governors announced regulations regarding down-payments, length of loans and types of credit would restrict installment buying of autos, refrigerators, washing machines, vacuum cleaners and other durable goods but would not effect charge accounts at department stores.

Oil

Defense Petroleum Coordinator Tolkes said the first full week of the 7-to-7 "curfew" for 100,000 East coast gas station showed virtually 100 percent cooperation with little loss but sales in the Eastern States were 13 percent higher than this time last year. He said "rigid steps" will have to be taken to restrict gasoline sales.

License Plate Metal

The OPACS requested State motor vehicle officials to require motorists to hand in their 1941 license plates when they get 1942 tags. The OPACS arranged for metal for the new tags because time was too short to seek substitutes but stated no sheet steel will be available for 1943 tags.
